Concept Note

The concept of life skill education is gaining momentum and rightfully so, it is an important way to perpetuate psycho-social competence among young students. In current context, where much emphasis is given to academics, life skill education needs to be stressed heavily upon, and consciously followed in the delivery of the school curriculum.

The role of a teacher as life skills trainer cannot be overemphasised. The teacher's personality and method of teaching have a deep impact and a long-lasting influence on the life of a student. A teacher can act as a role model and help in shaping future global citizens of the world. They may not quite realise this in the hustle-bustle of their hurried and stressed lives.

The main objective of life skill education is to enable students develop a concept of oneself as a worthy and contributing member of the society. Besides acquiring knowledge, students should have social skills, emotional balance, time management skills, financial literacy, health consciousness, and problem-solving skills among others. In order to ensure a person's holistic development, character building and value-based teaching is another essential item. Values of respect to others and kindness, tolerance with different cultures and cuisines, being truthful and courageous under any circumstance needs to inculcated. The sooner these skills are taught, the easier it is for the child to assimilate them.

With the right skill set, young minds will learn to deal with responsibility and accountability. The child will learn to use freedom appropriately and will be empowered to deal with life situations. As different ethnicities become one over cyberspace, young minds naturally are exposed to many temptations. It is impossible for parents as well as teachers to keep snooping around or policing them. It isn't also recommended that young minds be spied upon. Therefore, the only hope is to explain situations to children, and thereafter allow them to take judicious decisions.

This conference will discuss the relevance of holistic development based education in the development of child focussing on traditional education in modern era, moral values and ethics in teacher education, Bhartiya Gurukul Education System for holistic development of child, start-up culture at school level, role of experiential learning in including life skills among students, role of NEP-2020 in holistic value based education, etc.
